Dear President Kevin Hall,

We write as a group of concerned faculty members who are advocating for the University to reach out to the students in the Palestine Solidarity Encampment. We are heartened by your statement encouraging "thoughtful, reasoned and respectful academic discourse" and "absolute support [for] peaceful demonstrations and the right to freedom of expression" (May 10 Letter). In that spirit, we are calling for an immediate meeting between you and a small delegation of the UVic faculty members who have signed this letter. The purpose of this meeting would be to discuss meaningful ways for you to reach out personally to create a space for constructive dialogue and to actively work toward a peaceful and negotiated outcome. In our role as faculty members, we are committed to helping facilitate this conversation between our UVic students and the administration. We sincerely believe that UVic's engagement with us, and with UVic students, is an opportunity for the university to signal to the broader public its active commitment to open and constructive dialogue and academic freedom, especially critical in this era of fiscal crisis and "deep societal divisions" (May 10 Letter).

What we have witnessed in the encampment during these two weeks is a remarkable achievement in higher education: The students have built a place of solidarity, mutual education and peace, a place where students from diverse faiths (Muslims, Jewish, Christian, Sikh, Buddhist, Hindu, and more) share meals and ideas, a place where Indigenous students lead discussion circles about decolonization, and a place where parents and community members, irrespective of their financial means, show up to deliver food for our students. At many levels, we believe that the best of what UVic aims to provide in its academic mission is taking place on the lawn at this very moment. Students in the Palestine Solidarity Encampment are living many aspects of the university's strategic plan, for instance creating a "culture of change and transformation" by "having the courage to take risks, embrace new ideas, and be open to learning and trying things in new ways." (Distinctly UVic)

Students in the encampment are eager to meet with university leadership in good faith negotiations. We are calling for a meeting with your office as soon as possible to facilitate the start of a meaningful dialogue.

Thank you for responding to this urgent request.

Sincerely,
